Welcome Message

Dear colleagues,

While advances of modern medicine, science and technology have contributed to an improvement of general health and an increased life span, many people around the world are still suffering from disease, poverty and inadequate healthcare. To raise awareness of global public health issues, I believe that our priorities should include enhancing the relevance of global health curricula and training programs in public health. This will expand the knowledge of public health, as well as demonstrate effective intervention methods that will strengthen public healthcare systems.

I have no doubt that the 43rd APACPH Conference will give an opportunity to promote the professionalism, knowledge, and leadership network that will stimulate the global mission to enhance public health worldwide.

Furthermore, many countries recently became aware of the necessity of global cooperation in order to build up health policy and health law systems. This fact makes this conference even more applicable to current health care events. The main theme, "Public Health Law and Ethics," will support setting up health law in developing countries and promoting core national capacities for public health preparedness.

As President of APACPH, I invite and welcome you to Korea. I am optimistic that we will all witness the future of global healthcare during this event.

Dear colleagues,

As President in Yonsei University, it is a great honor for the Graduate School of Public Health of Yonsei University to have the opportunity of hosting the 43rd APACPH Conference. APACPH, for over two decades, has contributed greatly to promoting public health policies and enhancing both the capacity and sustainability of public health systems around the world.

Korea faces rapid changes in its health and medical environments due to a number of reasons: an accelerated aging society, subsequent increase in chronic illness, decrease in fertility rate, and consumer-oriented healthcare services. Today, such shifts are driving the growth of global public health projects, as well as emerging public health law and ethics. I believe that the delivery of education, which is leading the advancement of public health projects including public health law and ethics, should reflect this globalization. Global public health education at Yonsei will address major public health issues. This University has been keenly interested in this issue for decades and looks forward to overcoming current challenges.

Yonsei University, together with Korea's 5,000 year history, will spare no effort in boosting the social and global standing of the public health education by hosting the 43rd APACPH Conference here in Korea.
